“Transnational Arenas in Biodiversity Governance”

Wednesday, February 15, 2017

12:00 – 1:00 p.m.

Ostrom Workshop, 513 N. Park

This article is aimed at the construction of a taxonomy for global governance with an emphasis on the transnational arenas related to biodiversity governance. Firstly, the article presents the main approaches related to transnational arenas. Secondly, we move on to the taxonomy for global governance to finally present the case of biodiversity as we focus on the public-private dimension to analyze the role of non-state actors in the implementation of the biodiversity regulatory framework contemplated by the Convention on Biological Diversity (CBD) and the Nagoya Protocol. Biodiversity is a prominent research object for the environmental politics and governance agenda and sheds light on important issues and concepts that characterize the “new governance mechanisms” of international relations. Finally, we develop a typology of transnational private institutions aimed at biodiversity governance to empirically demonstrate how the interplay of private actors contributes to the implementation of the biodiversity agenda.

Murilo Zacareli is a PhD candidate in International Relations at the University of São Paulo, Brazil. He holds a Master’s degree in International Relations from the same institution and a Bachelor’s degree in International Relations and Foreign Commerce from the University of Ribeirão Preto (UNAERP). He is a researcher at the Center for the Studies of International Negotiations (CAENI) at the Institute of International Relations. His research interests are related to environmental politics, biodiversity regulation, non-state actors, and forest governance with a focus on non-timber forest products and sustainable development (website).
